RESEARCH RESOURCES ON LOWER MISSISSIPPI VALLEY ARCHAEOLOGY

Introduction

One result of Philip Phillips's decade-long research and publication program on the engraved shell from Spiro has been the recognition by LMS staff that important archaeological materials are very widely spread throughout institutions in the United States. Of course, Spiro is a special case, and undoubtedly artifacts from that famous site had a notoriety that led them to be much sought after. Also, because of Phil's detailed study and the extensive "matching" of broken fragments from different institutions, these disparate finds have had a value for his research that would not be true for that odd handful of arrowheads hiding in a dusty drawer from somewhere in the Lower Valley with nothing but a county/state geographic attribution.

Nevertheless, I am a firm believer in the value of museum collections, and, as we are dealing with a nonrenewable resource and escalating costs of data recovery, I can only feel that it behooves us all to try to make the maximum use of the objects and data that have already been recovered. Virtually every collection listed herein could profit from renewed study. For example, although I studied and photographed the Beckwith Collection in Cape Girardeau for the University of Michigan in 1950, I am sure that I would get much more from another look today.

One area of data that remains very underutilized is the visual record: the University of Michigan (JBG's files) and Peabody (LMS) files are probably the largest in this area. Thorne Deuel's Photographic Survey of the Mississippi Valley (Illinois State Museum) is virtually unknown to the profession. We have recently shared with Arkansas the appropriate parts of Phillips' vessel photo coverage, but other important visual resources are either not known or just not used. For example, the U.S. National Museum Photo Archives (located in the basement of the Museum of History and Technology) have all of Winslow Walker's field photos of his excavations at Troyville.

Unlike the other compilation from the Avery Island Conference, the Bibliography, this attempt to put together "Research Resources" has no predecessors and thus is truly a first draft. A third generation version of this list would be a computer readout giving the location of the material from all of the thousands of sites in the Lower Valley. We are obviously a long way from that, but this draft is a first step. The specificity concerning materials in the various institutions will of necessity be very varied. At the grossest level, only the state will be named; at the most specific level, whose excavated material from what sites will be given. In the big collections the latter could very easily get out of hand, so at this time we'll go to that level only when it seems like an unusual collection in an unlikely place.

This list of Research Resources is based on a survey conducted by the author during the winter and spring of 1978 from Santa Fe, New Mexico, where I was spending a sabbatical leave from Harvard under the happy shelter of the School of American Research. I am indebted to its director, Douglas W. Schwartz, and staff for many kindnesses. The survey of some 142 institutions was carried out by mail, using a single page inquiry form and covering letter (see sample), plus a self-addressed stamped envelope.

The results have been most gratifying. I seriously did not hope for such a high percentage of returns in such a short time (two months), nor did I expect so much generously supplied additional data. At this time nearly 90 percent of the institutions have responded, and all have been thanked by mail for their fine cooperation. I would like to state that it is a tribute to the quality of the museums' staffs that so much data could be acquired in such a short time, and I wish again to state my appreciation for the help of the some 130 people who filled out the forms.

I used the following volumes as basic sources from which to obtain the names and addresses of the institutions that I surveyed: 1) the AAM Museum Directory for 1977, 2) the AAA Guide to Departments of Anthropology (1977-78), 3) Franklin Folsom's "America's Ancient Treasures" (Rand McNally Travel Guide), and 4) Richard I. Ford's "Systematic Research Collections in Anthropology" (CMA Publication). Canada was included, but no European institutions were solicited, although I know that some collections do exist there. The very broad positive response that I received has led me to believe that I have not yet hit all the important American collections. Especially poorly represented are the art museums, which I hope to add to my survey at a later date.

Thanks to the wonders of Xerox, many institutions sent me more data than I could accommodate in these brief listings, including, in some cases, copies of all the pertinent catalogue information. These data have been incorporated into the LMS files at the Peabody Museum, Harvard University, Cambridge, Massachusetts 03138, and I would be happy (at least I think I would, if it doesn't get too onerous) to share this information with anyone seeking more detailed knowledge of a specific collection, if such is currently available in our files.

I have been aided in my search for institutions by the participants in the LMS Conference at Avery Island (May, 1978) and by other friends and colleagues, including Clarence H. Webb, Shreveport, Louisiana, and Art Wolf of the SAR staff. I am grateful for all that specialized help. I did hope to carry this listing of Research Resources one step further with the addition, before final publication, of a list of "Significant Private Collections." This matter is a bit "touchy," as it would include many collections that are still in private hands, as well as those which have ended up in research institutions where possible restricted access is, of course, not a problem. Someday I hope that appropriate means will be found to make this useful addition to the listings. Finally, I am happy to express the gratitude of the LMS to those who made the Avery Island Conference possible and to the Zemurray Foundation for support of this publication.

[sample letter]

With the prospect of returning to active research in the Lower Mississippi Valley, I am trying to put together a list of Research Resources on the archaeology of that area. As an old Museum hand, I know how frequently one gets letters requesting information about the contents of the Museum's holdings and how much time (a rare commodity) it takes to answer them. In order to expedite a response to my own query with a minimum of effort on your part, I've put together the enclosed form (one page with a self-addressed and stamped envelope) which I hope that either you or one of your "helpers" can simply check off.

At this point I am not seeking very detailed information - just the presence or absence of material from that area. I have personally looked at Lower Valley materials at most of the big museums, but often the unexpected collection has much new to offer. I am an unreconstructed believer in the value of museum collections for current research, which is why I helped to found the Council for Museum Anthropology a few years ago. At Peabody we have found out first hand of the value of these "old" collections during Phil Phillips' 10 year study of the Spiro engraved shells where disconnected pieces have proven to "fit-together" in collections hundreds of miles apart. I myself will never forget my own surprise at seeing Lower Valley pots at the Royal Ontario Museum in Toronto.

I am aware of your collections from _____, but I wonder if other parts of the Lower Valley area are also represented. I deeply appreciate your help in providing this information on your collection, and when I publish a listing of these Research Resources I will see that your institution gets a copy.

Sincerely,

Stephen Williams
Curator of North American Archaeology

Note: My current return address for correspondence is Route 3, Box 2, Santa Fe, NM 87501. I am in the Southwest on a sabbatical leave, hence the time to query you and your institution about Lower Mississippi Valley material.

Introduction	i-iii
1) LIST OF INSTITUTIONS Alphabetical by STATES	1-23
2) INSTITUTIONS SURVEYED BUT WITHOUT PERTINENT COLLECTIONS	24
3) INSTITUTIONS SURVEYED BUT NOT RESPONDING	25

NOTES ON THE USE OF THESE LISTINGS

I have tried to see that all the institutional addresses are correct as of this writing. I have not included the names of the individuals that I contacted at the institutions or those who signed the response form. I did not seek anonymity for these helpful people for any reason except that with the changes of personnel that seem to characterize most institutions today, I felt that it would not be useful, in the long run, to provide that data. The current editions of the sources mentioned above should provide the names of the appropriate individuals, and the standard "Curator of Collections" form of address that I had to use in many of my letters seems to have reached the right people in good time.

Obviously the nature of my questionnaire dictated the form of the response. Where only state proveniences are indicated, one must proceed with care; however, the majority of institutions had sufficient knowledge of their collections to know if they had significant materials for the survey. Where I have indicated both the time periods covered (eras) and the nature of the contents, I must confess to some guesswork. Often the response gave me enough data to allow me to be quite sure of my characterization, and personal knowledge of probably 40% of the collections helped too, but sometimes I have just given a "gut" reaction. I will therefore accept corrections most happily.

I have included (marked with an asterisk *) some few institutions that did not return a form, but which I know from personal visits do have relevant materials. Any additional data or location of other collections would be most gratefully received.

As to the manner of listing the institutions, I have placed them in alphabetical order of the major geographic units (mainly states). Within those units there is no discernable order--there is a rationale for this lack of system, first, there are not too many institutions in each category, and second, I could not decide how to alphabetize them within each state--should it be by institutional name or by city location. I chose to do neither. I hope that the list remains useful despite this classificatory cop-out.
