

VOLUNTEERS

Twiddy-Saunders Site

Local residents from across the region and two Currituck High School classes volunteered each day to help make the archaeological excavations at Twiddy-Saunders a success. Many were given the opportunity to experience archaeology while helping to gain information about this unique Carolina Bay site before it was destroyed.

Acknowledgments

Many organizations and individuals contributed to make this project a success. These include: The Currituck County Government and School System, The Currituck Historical Society, The Coinjock Ruritan Club, The North Carolina Archaeological Society, Fort Bragg Cultural Resources Program, East Carolina University Phelps Archaeological Laboratory, Max Freeze who took many of the pictures, and most importantly members of the local community.
